This leads to the second difficulty of the bungalow, namely shortage of water in hot weather. The bungalow being situated on a hill, naturally has to have a deep well and the well in this compound is a hundred and eight feet deep with an ordinary pulley. Even this 108 feet is not straight, for, near the bottom a ridge projects making the bottom portion of the well out of alignment and causes damage to the buckets, which in these days are costly. Apart from the delay in getting water up (i.e. it takes 1 minute 16 seconds to draw one bucket of water), it runs short of water in April and May.

In this type design bungalow and outhouses there are only 4 very small rooms available for servants in the whole of the compound. There is no room for storing camp samans, fuel etc. At least one extra room or godown may be constructed.
